

The North Wind And The Sun

Adapted by Harvey D'Souza

Narrator: The North Wind and the Sun were fighting.

North Wind: I am stronger than you!

Sun: No, I am stronger than you!

North Wind: I can blow down trees and houses!

Sun: I can burn the plants and dry up the rivers.

Narrator: And they kept on arguing day and night. The Moon was fed up of them and told them to have a competition to see who was the strongest.

Moon: Why don't you have a competition to see who is the strongest?

North Wind and Sun: Okay, let's have a competition.

Moon: See that man walking down road wearing that heavy coat?

North Wind and Sun: Yes!

Moon: You must make him take off his heavy coat. Whoever does that wins the competition!

Narrator: The North Wind began. He blew and blew as hard as he could. It became very cold and windy. But the man only held on to his coat.

North Wind (finally giving up): I give up. It's your turn, Sun.

Narrator: The Sun rose high in the sky and shone down on the planet. It became very hot. The man unbuttoned his coat. But the Sun did not stop burning. Finally, the man took off his coat.

Sun: I win! Yippee!!

Narrator: And the North Wind went away angrily. He is still angry today and always blows as hard as he can.
